

Eman El-Badawi is an active resident of Cranbury NJ. She graduated from Douglass College, Rutgers University with a Biology degree and worked in a Development Biology lab before deciding to stay at home to raise her 6 children. Eman chose to utilize her science background and start a local sheep farm with her husband and children.

A multi-lingual, world traveler, Eman grew up in Malaysia, later on moving to Saudi Arabia, Egypt and then the U.S. This has offered her, firsthand knowledge and experience of people, cultures and languages. While, Eman hails from a multi-ethnic, multi-faith background, she is a practicing member of the local Muslim community.

Inter-faith dialog, outreach and service has been Eman's focus for many years. She started her volunteerism at the Interfaith Hospitality Network in Columbus Ohio and now works with Interfaith Rise in NJ to provide volunteer services to the growing refugee population. She is a Regional Co-ordinator for the Jewish/Muslim Inter-faith group, Sisterhood of Salam Shalom, and she provides informational outreach efforts through New Jersey Islamic Networks Group whose goal is to promote religious understanding and tolerance, especially as it pertains to Islam.
